

FOUR ROSES BOURBON

60' CINEMA

"ARTISTE!"

Open on a paint spattered decorator entering a rather up market art gallery. Under one arm is crusty looking roller, under the other a brand new radio, pristine and spotless.

Cut to the look of distaste on the gallery owner's face; she spots his new radio and holds a finger to her lips.

Cut to him looking down at his overalls as he passes a huge abstract painting, they're not dissimilar.

Cut to him surveying his wall, he switches on his radio and starts painting.

Cut to him chewing on a sandwich while taking a closer look at the abstract. He looks at his wall and then back to the painting.

Cut to him throwing paint at the wall then smearing it with his hands; then his stomach, his back, his backside and even his head.

Cut to the horrified expression of the owner as our painter emerges completely white from head to toe carrying a still spotless radio. She dashes into the gallery only to find she now has a perfect white wall.

Cut to pack shot of a bottle of Four Roses, the roses go from bud to bloom on the label. Super title: Try life in full bloom.
